

The holy mountain

THE NAME HÆGEFJELL may come from the Old Norse Hågefjell – “the high mountain”. The mountain is prominent, jutting out from the surrounding terrain. The name may also mean “the holy mountain”. Perhaps Pagan ceremonies were performed here before Christianity reached Norway? There are burial mounds in the area, and relics from the Viking era have been found on local farms. Did you know that Hægefjell is made of magma from the Earth’s interior? The rock is called granite gneiss, and is the reason for the excellent sandy beaches that can be found the whole way along the lakes Vråvatn and Nisser. Local people say that the mountain is “stingy”. By that they mean that it provides so little in the way of nutrients that only a few plants can grow there. Those that do survive there, are mostly found sheltered from the wind.

WHAT YOU MIGHT SEE ON YOUR WALK

COTTONGRASS: Cottongrass is common in moist ground. It is easy to recognise on account of its soft, fluffy flowers.

LOUIS MOE from Arendal has been described as Denmark’s answer to Walt Disney. One of his chief sources of inspiration was the Vrådal scenery and its abundant wildlife. He is most famous as an illustrator of children’s books, and for his pictures of animals wearing clothes. He also introduced Norwegian trolls and monsters into the fairytale world of the Danish writer H. C. Andersen. In 1896 Louis

Moe built Juvlandsæter, his summer house in Vrådal. With his bushy white beard he looked like a king from a fairytale, and for over 40 years he would return there every summer to his “throne” with its views of the distant hills, peaceful lakes and many islands. He inspired also the cartoonist Solveig Muren Sanden from Vrådal. She brought the characters in the children’s comic strips Smørbukke and Tuss og Troll to life. For both of them, the scenery and the local people were important sources of inspiration. There are two small galleries in Vrådal that exhibit the works of these two illustrators.
